“ Some memories of Dr. Chatman from an accounting student at UDC: Dr. Chatman was the most gracious person that I could encounter. He liked to regale us with stories of growing up in SC, working his way through college as a doorman at the Mayflower Hotel and his real-estate side business. What it all added up to is that anyone can make it, given hard work, persistence, and study. This was particularly important to me, and I believe to many others in the class, as I believe that the majority of us were working our way through college, and often needed some encouragement to keep grinding.

In Intermediate Accounting, he made us memorize the unqualified auditor's opinion, having us recite it along with him in his booming Southern-accent voice, with outstanding enunciation. During these exercises, I liked to imagine that he was Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Because of his outstanding teaching, he was my favorite college professor, and his accounting lessons and example in life continue to resonate with me four decades later.
