“ *To The Family of My Bro. 50,
50 was a guy that I got to know extremely well over the years. It wasn't to the ladder years of our lives that I realized that I had picked up some of his habits, caritoritics and some mannerisms. 50 was a fighter of life's journey until the end. 50 drove 18 wheelers and could tell you every make, model and engine size of every rig on the road. 50 was able to take an engine apart of a rig and then put it back together. 50 also could tell a person how to go across and which highway or road to take before GPS existed. You could always count on 50 to give some type of response to situations by verbalizing something in regards to a (Monkey or Kissing A Fat Baby). 50 will be missed by all especially me however; I know that he's up the road at the Truck Stop, at the next EXIT.*

“ To The Family of My Bro. 50,
I have always shared lots of moments with 50 over the years and some were not that great however the good times over powered any of the bad. It truly wasn't until these ladder years that I have so many characteristics that 50 had. You could always count on 50 talking about the (Monkey or Kissing The Fat Baby) and laughing about what he had said. 50 through out his years was a person who not only loved to drive tractor trailers he knew the make and model of every other rig and knew how to take the engine apart and put it back together. 50 possessed multiple mechanical skills and was able to tell a person how to get across country and what roads to take well before GPS during his life. 50 was a true fighter of life and he continued this attitude to the end. 50 will did be missed by all especially me.

“ All of my memories of Papa bring two words to mind..stern and steady. He had a quietness about him and a look like he was really thinking about something. When the thought and words were connected at you they were sharp and direct! I guess thats where my momma gets it from. He made me feel protected and like he had everything under control. I Guess you would call that a quiet strength. It MUST be an Edmunds thing. It's blunt and you just might catch alittle sting or an attitude after they are finished. Uncle vernon has this sameee quality. Oh lord, but I tell you, the love is strong. Papa would always make a point to say a kind word to me and ask how I was doing on the phone, during Holidays or whatever occasion it was. He would even say something smart and make me laugh! Even though, half the time when I picked up the phone he would say something that didnt even pertain to me and it was directed at my sister Angel! I would think, why do I always catch greif for her mess! I'll miss my phone calls with my grandfather. But, i'm happy to know that I knew him.. thats a blessing. I'm happy that he is free now and he can go scold my sister like she deserves and I can laugh because she will finally get to be the recipient of that little sting that I had to edure for allll those years! Take care Papa, I love you and you have earned your wings.
