As a civil-minded student, Harris' post-secondary studies at Southern University in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, were interrupted after she was arrested and expelled for leading a sit-in at S.H. Kress Lunch Counter on March 28, 1960.

When the U.S. Supreme Court, which ruled no breach of peace law was broken, heard her trial in December 1961, the determined scholar was already enrolled at Central State University, under President Charles Harris Wesley, in Wilberforce, Ohio, where she obtained a B.A. in Psychology in 1962. This same year, she wed the love of her life Dr. Rudolph Harris, they have two children Rylan and Junie Harris.

Committed to preserving African-American history, Harris went on to earn a Ph.D. in History (1975) from Howard University. She worked for the Peace Corps and the Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History.

She taught history in D.C. Public Schools, Afro American History of Women at the University of the District of Columbia, Bowie State University, and at Lorton prison among others.

AW

I met Dr. Hoston Harris through my boss the late Dr. C. DeLores Tucker. Dr. Hoston Harris was a trailblazer. It was she who alerted Dr. Tucker to others' plans to raise the suffragette statue from the Capitol basement without adding Sojourner Truth to the bust. With that in mind, she was the wings beneath Dr. Tucker's success in getting Sojourner Truth's bust in the U.S. Capitol.

God bless you Dr. Hoston Harris for all your good deeds and good works. You will not be forgotten.
